In the past, it was a bit difficult to choose a new ringtone on Android compared to making a ringtone on iOS, but things are much easier now and you don't need special software. Here's everything you need to know about how to make a ringtone for Android and how to turn a song into a ringtone. In a few simple steps, you can turn your ringtone into something more personal than the standard ringtones included with your smartphone. Here's what to do. On your smartphone's home screen, tap Apps. Tap Sons and Notifications. If it's not listed in Quick Settings, scroll down to find it. Press Ringtones add. Choose a track from the songs already stored on your phone. You can also type albums, artists or folders, as well as search by name. If you have a lot of audio files on your smartphone. Tap the song you want to use. Press Finished. The song or audio file is now your ringtone. Just retrace the steps to change it again. With a few songs, you might not want the opening riff as your ringtone. If you want to choose a clip from a song, you need a dedicated app to do the job. The RingDroid app is one of the best, and it takes a few seconds to use and cut a song with it. Here's how to cut a song. Download and open the RingDroid app. Tap the song file you want to edit. Tap Trim, then drag your finger around the clip, reducing it to exactly what you want to hear. Press download. Tap play to hear a preview. Press Save. Press Use Like. Press Ringtone, then tap Fact to set the bell. Want to set a different ringtone for different people, so you know exactly who is calling? It's pretty simple, once you know how. Tap Contacts. Scroll down to the person you want to add a custom ringtone to, then tap the contact name. Press Edit. Press Ringtone. Choose the ringtone, then press OK. Press Save. The first step in adding a ringtone to your phone is to find the one you like. In general, this means checking out one of the dozens of ringing sites on the Internet and choosing a good one that is compatible with your phone model. Some sites charge for using their ringtones, to cover song royalties, among other things, and some sites provide tones for free. Free. many older songs (such as classic pieces) have been around long enough that their copyright has expired - they have entered the public domain, so they are free for anyone to use. Once you've found a ringtone you like, you just have to get it in your phone's memory. There are a number of different ways to do this, depending on your particular phone model. The three main ways to add a new ringtone are: Advertising Load the ringing program in the phone from a computer, via a data cable. Send the program over the phone on the airwaves. Type the program directly into the phone, using the keyboard. Phones can use a particular method exclusively, but many phones have several options. Check your instruction manual to find out what your phone can do. If you have the right phone, software and computer configuration, loading ringtones through a data link or infrared interface may be the simplest option, but it takes a bit of work and expense to set everything up initially. A more popular method is to send the new ringtone to your phone on the airwaves. This approach was born with Nokia, but other manufacturers have since added this ability to their phones. The basic idea is to send the phone a special kind of text message that contains the program for ringing - in most phones, this is done using either short message service or enhanced messaging service technology. Nokia originally developed short message service to send short text messages between phones. Later, Nokia and Intel created smart messaging, a special protocol for sending non-texting functional information via SMS. Basically, a smart SMS message is coded to allow the phone equipped to recognize it as a graphic, ringtone, etc. The most common method for transferring ringtones to the airwaves is to visit a ringing website, choose a tone, enter your phone number and let the site administrators send the message to your phone directly. Alternatively, you can use an SMS gateway site to send a specific message to the phone yourself. This means finding the code for the ringtone you want, finding it in the appropriate format (Nokia binary format, for example) and copying it as a smart message. Cell phones with a melody composer allow you to type ringtones directly. The easiest way to use this feature is to find the appropriate keypress sequence for a melody on the web. This sequence will tell you which buttons to press your in composer mode, to program the ringtone you want (check your instruction manual for more details on how to make your phone' composer mode). Of course, for the ringtone to work, the sequence must be in the right format. Fortunately, you can find tons of footage online for most phone models. As cell phones evolve, ringtones become more complex. Already, some phones have a polyphonic ringing capability, which means that the phone can play more than one note at a time, allowing for richer and harmonized tunes. Some new phones allow you to save to record and voicemails for the ringtones yourself. Many of these models also allow you to assign different ringtones to different incoming numbers, so you know who is calling you without even looking at your phone. In the near term, the ringtones will have gone from an outside thrill to an essential telephone function.
